

Conversational Turn-Taking

Today's Standard

1.SL.1b - Build on others' talk in conversations by responding to the comments of others through multiple exchanges.

Real-World Applications for this Standard

Classroom discussions; Group projects; Family dinner conversations; Playground interactions; Storytelling circles

Today I Learned

Today, we learned about how to build on others' talk in conversations. This means listening to what others say and then adding our own thoughts or questions.

Common Stumbling Blocks

Sometimes, kids think they should just repeat what others say or always agree with them. But it's better to ask questions or share different ideas.

Quiz Me

- What should you do after someone talks?
- Is it okay to ask questions in a conversation?
- Can you add your own ideas when talking to someone?
- Do you always have to agree with others?
- What can you say if you see things differently?

Help Me

When you talk with others, listen carefully and then add your own thoughts or questions. This makes conversations more interesting and helps you learn new things.
