

Identifying Story Elements

Today's Standard

K.RL.3 - With prompting and support, identify characters, settings, and major events in a story.

Real-World Applications for this Standard

Discuss characters and settings in a favorite storybook.; Create a simple drawing of a story's setting and characters.; Act out major events from a story with classmates.; Use story maps to visualize characters, settings, and events.

Today I Learned

Today, we learned how to find characters, settings, and major events in a story. This helps us understand and enjoy stories better.

Common Stumbling Blocks

Sometimes, kids might think characters in a story are real people. We can use puppets to show the difference. Also, kids might get confused if the setting changes. Story maps can help keep track of different places in the story.

Quiz Me

- Who is in the story?
- Where does the story happen?
- What are the important things that happen?
- Can you draw a picture of the characters?
- Can you draw a picture of the setting?

Help Me

When we read stories, we can look for who is in the story, where the story happens, and what important things happen. This helps us understand the story better. For example, if we read 'Goldilocks and the Three Bears,' we can talk about Goldilocks, the bears, and their house in the forest.
