Today I Learned

Today, we learned about how to continue a conversation by talking and listening to each other. This helps us understand our friends and share our ideas.

Common Stumbling Blocks

Sometimes, kids think that talking is the only important part of a conversation, but listening is just as important. Also, they might think they should always be the one talking, but it's important to take turns.

Quiz Me

- What do we need to do in a conversation?
- Why is listening important?
- How can we practice taking turns?
- Can you name a game that helps us listen better?
- What is one way to practice talking and listening?

Help Me

Talking and listening to each other helps us understand our friends and share our ideas. We can practice this by playing games where we take turns talking and listening, like 'Simon Says' or using puppets to have conversations.
